Printing of every description neatly executed: such as Books, Pamphlets, Circulars, Cards, Handbills, etc., on as good terms as at any other office.

To the friends of Temperance and the public generally we now make our appeal in behalf of this paper. The publisher feeling it a matter of importance to the interest of the Temperance cause in the District, as well as the general interest of the cause, and having been, as he conceives, providentially placed in a situation at this time when he can mingle this interest with that of the business men, and thereby render a double service to the community, and still further open a medium of communication by which our principles may be extended far and wide, at a cheap rate, he has purchased a printing establishment, so as not only to be able to put a daily paper regularly to press, but also a weekly; and still further, be able to do any other printing the public may be pleased to have done; and he assures them that they shall have no cause of complaint. He has made arrangements by which he can devote his time to the interest of the office and the paper; and, having employed Mr. Charles W. Fenton, who will be always on the spot, to conduct the printing, he has no doubt but that general satisfaction will be given. We shall make arrangements to have the earliest news; also the proceedings of Congress.

We wish all who are indebted for the paper up to this time to pay up, as the affairs of the tri-weekly must be closed. They will perceive that we are about to give them a better paper, double the number, at the same price.

While the "COLUMBIAN FOUNTAIN" will be devoted to the cause of Temperance, its columns will be enriched by original articles on subjects calculated to interest, instruct, and benefit its readers. It is intended so to blend variety, amusement, and instruction, as that the various tastes of its patrons may be (as far as it is practicable) gratified. Commerce, Literature, and Science, and every other subject of interest, not inconsistent with Temperance and morality, will receive the earnest attention of the publisher. Nothing of a sectarian, political, or personal character will be admitted.

ROGER DUTTON; OR, THE TRUE PROPHECY.

"A lad!" cried Edith, "why he's full forty, my dear father."

"Tut!" cried the Earl, "that's a lad to me, you saucy wench. I'm right glad your mother is not here, Madam Edith—she would be in a fine fright. But you have a stout heart."

"Not so stout but you'll have to cut the string of my bodice," said Edith, "if you make such a terrible noise as there was upon the walls just now."

"Well, well, go to," cried the Earl. "I have not time to gossip more with you, I must go and see what they are about. But take heart, take heart, there is no danger—they never can get in—they have no ladders or machines of any kind. Out upon it! we will throw the walls down upon them first! 'Tis but by starvation they can take us. Ho, Barnaby! without there! look to the provisions and see there be no waste! What have ye got man?"

"There are two cows and a bullock," said the man, "three pigs and an old sow, besides the fowls that the Lady Edith feeds in the morning, then we have bread enough for one day, and corn enough for another. The beer cellar is half full, and there are three barrels of sack and a pipe of Malvoise. We can last well high for a week, my lord, without touching the horses."

"That'll do—that'll do!" cried the Earl, "long ere that we shall have help;" and away he went to the battlements, where, somewhat to his surprise, he found no further show of immediate attack, the Welshmen still surrounding the castle on every side, but keeping carefully beyond the ordinary reach of an arrow.

"Why, what are they about?" said the Earl to one of his old knights.

"Pon my life, I don't know, my lord," replied the other, "they seem tired of it, and are drawing off for the night."

"Pooh! nonsense!" cried the Earl, "it is not near nightfall."

"Within an hour, my Lord," replied one of those who stood near, "'tis well nigh eight."

"How quick the time goes when one's busy!" observed the Earl; but who has got the sharpest eye here? let him run up to the top of the tower, and see what they are doing there; those men, I mean, far up the hill."

"The Lady Edith has the sharpest eyes," said a young gentleman near, who was never sorry to put himself in any sort of communication with his lord's daughter; don't you recollect she saw the heron when none of us could see it?"

"Well, call her! call her!" cried the Earl; as they are not shooting any longer, there is no danger."

Away ran the youth, and in a few minutes more Edith and Mary and the whole host of maids crept out upon the battlements, with faces somewhat pale and wan, indeed, notwithstanding all the assurances of the young gentleman who had been sent to fetch them, that there was no risk of any kind.

"Come hither, Edith, come hither," exclaimed Earl Ranulph; "run up to the top of the tower, and see what your sharp eyes will do. Do you see those white-shirted Welshmen on the hill just under the wood—five or six hundred of them, all gathered together? Go and see if you can find out what they are about—make your eyes of use to some one."

Edith turned to obey, while the young gentleman who stood by said something about compensation, and eyes, and piercing hearts, and other things of the same kind, which made the lady give him a scornful look, and made the old Earl himself laugh heartily.

"These young fools!" he cried—"well a-day! get thee gone, Edith! get thee gone! Why, how now, young Cholmondeley, you are not going too? Stay here, every one but Edith! Mary, you may go if you will; but that's enough."

Ladies are fond of hunting in couples, and Mary accompanied her cousin up the numerous steps of the watch-tower, taking that opportunity of reading her own heart a sad homily upon all the consequences of her jealous passion, and asking herself how far the punishment would be carried. It was indeed an edifying and instructive lesson which she gave herself, and one which might also be without its effect upon the reader, if we would relate all the reproaches which she addressed to herself, step by step, as she went up the stairs. But, dear reader, we have not time, and as those stairs were long, we must lift her and Edith to the top of the tower at once; and there they stood gazing around them over the wide-spread hills and shady forests which at that time formed the principal feature of the fair principality. While Edith, however, fixed her eyes upon the spot to which her father had directed her attention, and easily discovered, though with no slight terror it must be owned, what the assailants were about. Mary's heart turned towards Chester, and her safe and happy home; and, as is so frequently the case, her eyes followed the direction of her thoughts. There she stood, then, looking over the battlements, and like sister Anne in the fairy tale, looking out to see if any one was coming. The road to Chester was clear enough before her eyes, and she could see it rise up over the neighboring hills—lose itself in the wood upon the top—issue forth in the valley beyond—and once more ascend the side of a steep but naked mountain.

Her eyes were little less good than those of her cousin; and, after gazing forth for about two minutes, she first gave a start, and then felt a strong inclination to clap her hands; but smothering her emotions, whatsoever they were, she demurely turned to her cousin, saying, "well Edith have you found out what they are doing?"

"Making ladders, I think," said Edith, in a sad tone.

"Poor things!" said Mary, with a saucy smile; many a one will get a broken neck from those ladders, if they make them."

"How can you talk in such a way, Mary?" cried her cousin; we are more likely to get our throats cut than they their necks broke. Why, if they make enough of them they will soon be within the walls."

"We must keep them out, Edith," replied Mary, "but come, let us tell your father. You go down first Edith; I won't lead the way down that narrow back staircase."

Edith accordingly began to descend, but Mary lingered for another moment, to look once more in the direction of Chester. But this time she could not restrain herself, she clasped her hands together, with a look of joy, ere she followed her cousin down the walls.

The course of studies in Pennsylvania College is as extensive and substantial as that of any institution in the country. The Preparatory Department provides for instruction in all the branches of a thorough English business education, in addition to the Elements of the Mathematics and Classical Literature. The College course is arranged in the four classes usual in the institutions of this country.

The government of the students is as energetic as their circumstances seem to require. They attend at least two recitations a day, and the Faculty contemplate increasing them to three, Church and Bible Class on the Sabbath, and are visited in their rooms so frequently as to preclude the danger of any great irregularities. It is believed no institution in the United States has more exemplary young men in connexion with it. They are all required to lodge in the College edifice, special cases excepted.

The annual expenses are—for board, tuition and room rent, during the winter session $61 87 1-2; for the summer session, $41 87 1-2; washing, $10; wood, $3 00. Total expense, $116 75. Boarding can be had in town at $1 25 per week.

There are two vacations in the year, commencing on the third Thursdays of April and September; each of five weeks continuance.

The summer session will commence on Thursday, the 22d of May. The annual commencement takes place on the third Thursday in September.

The Trustees have recently made various arrangements which will increase the efficiency of the Institution. They have increased the number of Professors and provided for the most ample instruction of the students.

Professor Baugher and Haupt are prepared to board boys and to exercise a special supervision over their studies and deportment, and Parents who may prefer placing their sons under their care, will be secure in regard to their proper management, under arrangements such as pertain to the family circle.
